Working with relative, absolute, and mixed references

- [Instructor] In the previous movie I showed you how to use cell references and formulas. In this movie I'll go into more detail about what happens when you copy those formulas, and show you how to manage what changes and what doesn't by using relative and absolute references. As my sample file, I will use the RelativeAndAbsolute workbook. You can find it in the Chapter01 ...

Flag for use with createPackageContext(String, int): include the application code with the context. This means loading code into the caller's process, so that getClassLoader() can be used to instantiate the application's classes. Setting this flags imposes security restrictions on what application context you can access; if the requested application can not be safely loaded into your process ...
