ABSTRACT A primary goal of scale development is to create a valid measure of an underlying construct.

Constructing Validity: Basic Issues in Objective Scale

develop a powerful technique for constructing measures with the properties we want, e.g. the Lebesgue measures and the coin tossing measure described in Section 5.1. When we construct a measure, we usually start by knowing how we want it to behave on a family of simple sets: For the Lebesgue measure on \mathbb{R} , we Content validity: Items on a questionnaire must relate to the construct being measured. For example, a questionnaire measuring Intrusive Thoughts is pretty useless if it contains items relating to statistical ability. Content validity is really how representative your questions are the sampling adequacy of items.
