A nuclear electromagnetic pulse (commonly abbreviated as nuclear EMP, or NEMP) is a burst of electromagnetic radiation created by a nuclear explosion. The resulting rapidly varying electric and magnetic fields may couple with electrical and electronic systems to produce damaging current and voltage surges. The specific characteristics of a particular nuclear EMP event vary according to a number ...

Note: Although it is true that cell phones emit low frequency magnetic fields that can be measured in milliGauss, they also emit high frequency microwave radiation which is what all the concern (and publicity) is about, and which the products below are designed to shield. Many clients have contacted us seeking a shield for BOTH magnetic fields and microwaves for their phone.

Gamma rays from a nuclear explosion produce high energy electrons through Compton scattering. For high altitude nuclear explosions, these electrons are captured in the Earth's magnetic field at altitudes between twenty and forty kilometers where they interact with the Earth's magnetic field to produce a coherent nuclear electromagnetic pulse (NEMP) which lasts about one millisecond.

Have you read Ted Koppel's book about an anticipated EMP event? In the past, almost all the warnings about an electromagnetic pulse "whether from a massive solar storm or a terrorist attack" have been voiced by conservatives.

Metal cladding can make just about any structure proofed against EMP. For good resistance at a reasonable price I'd suggest a layer of grounded stucco lathe in the outer chain shell layer. That would form a faraday cage and deflect the EMP in many directions, lessening its effect considerably.
